

About the Contributors

EMMANUEL ADEDAYO ADEDUN is a Senior Lecturer in the Department of English, University of Lagos, Nigeria and a Visiting Scholar at the Centre for Language, Discourse and Communication, King's College, University of London. His research interests are Sociolinguistics and application of sociolinguistic insights to Advertising, Film and Pedagogy.

BEGOÑA CRESPO has published on the processes of lexicon enlargement in the History of English, genre/text-type taxonomy and the diachronic development of English scientific writing. She is currently supervising some PhD Dissertations on the language of science. She has co-organised several conferences on English Philology, Medieval Studies and Corpus Linguistics and summer courses on women studies. She is the main researcher of the project "Women and scientific discourse: social differences and language variation in English (1700-1930)". She has published in journals such as Quaderni di Semantica, Studia Neophilologica, English Studies, Studia Anglica Posnaniensia and Literary and Linguistic Computing among others as well as book chapters in D.S Brewer, Rodopi, Peter Lang, Lincom Europa or John Benjamins.

JENNIFER HERRIMAN does research within Systemic Functional Linguistics. Her main focus is on the organization of information structure in English and Swedish texts. She is professor of English linguistics at the Department of Languages and Literatures, University of Gothenburg.

ENCARNACIÓN HIDALGO TENORIO is a Senior Lecturer at the University of Granada, Spain, where she teaches a variety of undergraduate and postgraduate courses on English language and linguistics. Her research interests include gender studies, critical discourse analysis, corpus linguistics and Irish theatre.

224 About the contributors

MILENA KATSARSKA is Lecturer in American and Culture Studies at the University of Plovdiv, Bulgaria. Her publications are in the fields of culture studies, intercultural communication, disciplinarity and education. Among them are Migration, Modern Nationalism and Nostalgia for the Homeland in the Age of Globalization (Plovdiv University Press 2007, co-editor), English Studies on This Side: Post-2007 Reckonings (Plovdiv University Press 2010, co-editor), the chapter contributions “The Bulgarian Connection in Harry Potter” in Suman Gupta, Re-Reading Harry Potter (Palgrave Macmillan 2009, 2 ed.) and “English Studies in Non-Anglophone Contexts: Bulgaria” in Maria Georgieva and Allan James Eds. Globalization in English Studies (Cambridge Scholars Publishing, 2010).

DONKA KESKINOVA is Lecturer in Statistical Methods and Programming at the Department of Sociology at the University of Plovdiv, Bulgaria. She has participated in over 300 surveys and research projects funded by the WIPO (World Intellectual Property Organisation); EU Sixth Framework; EU Copernicus Program; The British Council; The Friedrich Ebert Foundation; Bulgarian Ministry of Culture; Bulgarian Ministry of Law; Bulgarian Helsinki Committee; BBSS Gallup International; Bulgarian Academy of Sciences – among others. Her current consultancy research includes network analysis and cluster analysis of the regional economy in the South East of England; Mapping of the regional health-technology cluster in the South East of England; and Mapping of the copyright sectors in the Bulgarian economy. Her main publications are in the field of cluster analysis, network analysis, and multiple correspondent analysis.

SIGNE OKSEFJELL EBELING holds a PhD in corpus-based contrastive linguistics and is associate professor of English language at the University of Oslo, Norway. Over the past 15-20 years she has worked on various corpus projects, including the English-Norwegian Parallel Corpus (University of Oslo) and the British Academic Written English corpus (Oxford Brookes University). Her research interests include contrastive analysis, phraseology and learner language.

ARNE OLOFSSON has an academic background in Latin and Greek, but he switched to English linguistics in the 1970s. From 1976 to 2010, when he retired, he worked at the English department of the University of Gothenburg, from 2001 as a professor. He has been involved in teaching (linguistics, proficiency and translation), academic leadership (head of department for 12 years) and research (four main fields: linguistic variation, including grammaticalization, word-formation, including etymology, lexicography, mainly bilingual, and English proficiency testing, including construction and evaluation of tests. His dissertation, Relative Junctions in Written American English, based on the Brown Corpus, was published in Gothenburg Studies in English in 1981. Its main theme, the choice of relativizers, reappeared in half a dozen articles 2001–2009 based on other corpora. Other books deal with the influence of Latin and Greek word-formation: De internationella orden and Klassiska ord, both in collaboration with Alvar Ellegård.

JOANA SALAZAR NOGUERA is an associate professor at the University of the Balearic Islands in Palma de Mallorca, Spain. She has participated in several European research groups and has created the educative website <http://www.spanishkid.org> to promote multicultural understanding. She has published on the adequacy of EFL methodologies in the Spanish educative context. She coordinates the Research Development Centre on Secondary Teacher Education of the ATEE (Association of Teacher Education in Europe).

MOJISOLA SHODIPE is a lecturer in the Department of English, University of Lagos. Her research interests are Variation Studies and Sociophonology.

JUSTIN WAGEMAN is an associate professor in the School of Education at North Dakota State University. He directs a curriculum organization that has provided professional development to American educators for over a decade. His research and teaching interests include language methodology, program evaluation, professional development, and assessment.